Created in 2015 by a group of young men and women all farmers, the RASSO cooperative is one of the few in Côte d'Ivoire to have a high rate of women both as directors and members. Directed by a woman, this cooperative has 50% of women in the management bodies. Moreover, while the national average varies between 5 and 10%, RASSO has 25% women members and cocoa plantation owners. These women thus have an impact on the quality of their households but also on the education of their children thanks to the income from cocoa.
